2. If possible, get a brochure or flier advertising the company or their products (or take a picture of one). Upload below.

3. What products or services is the company selling?

Green Ivy - Sells clothing bundles and packages that were trendy but also sustainable at a cost-effective price.

Lensify - AI glasses that are able to use augmented reality to help educators and entertainment. Model 1 is mostly for education at a lower price, whilst model 2 is more expensive as an entertainment product.

NeuroShield - Protective helmets and other safety devices for scooters, bikes, and skates that include tracking devices.

Flourish - Mental Health conscious plants that guide teens to help grow plants and mental health betterment.

Snugology - Weighted, scented, and heatable stuffed animals that help teen mental health.

4. What sales tactics did they use to get you to purchase their products/services? What did you purchase?

a. How did they approach you?

Neuroshield asked if I ride bikes, scooters, or skate, and what kind of helmet do I already own and told me what their helmet did better.

b. Did they offer any giveaways to get you to stop? If so, what?

Lensify offered that if I bought two glasses, I would get a plastic pair of glasses as well as a glasses case.

c. Did they have a gimmick (such as a mascot)?

Snugology had multiple different stuff animals on display, with unique stories for all of the stuffed animals.

d. What was the tone of their sales pitch – did they use humor, was it strictly business, or did they have a “low pressure” or “high pressure” sales technique?

Green Ivy utilized low-pressure sales, with their sales representative tying in humor and relatability as their sales technique.

e. Did they have some activity to bring in customers?

Flourish had multiple TV screens and potted plants showcasing their product, which drew in interested customers passing by.

5. Was their booth attractive? What did you like about it? What didn't you like?

Neuroshield had a large sign that was impossible to miss but had few things to draw in passer-bys. For instance, there was no example of an actual product.

Lensify had a large sign as well as displays showcasing the plastic glasses and product they were giving away, but not showing what the glasses really did.

Snugology had many stuffed animals and stories accompanying stuffed animals, but did not really have any large description of the company.

Green Ivy had clothes hangars showcasing what was included in each clothing bundle.

Flourish had many different cool plants and many screens telling customers what it was selling.

6. What was your overall impression of their sales presence at the trade fair? Did they convince you to buy from them? Is this a company you would do business with in the future? Why or why not?

Green Ivy: Engaging and relatable. Yes, I'd buy again for their sustainable focus.

Lensify: Interesting but needed better demos. Maybe, because of the innovative tech.

Neuroshield: Informative but lacked visuals. Yes, for the safety features.

Flourish: Attractive booth and unique concept. Definitely, for mental health focus.

Snugology: Charming and creative. Yes, their approach to mental health stood out.

7. What do you think you and/or your company can do to improve at future trade shows?

I think that VitaPearls needs to add more things to the booth in order to make it more interesting for people to come visit it. For instance, we could add a bigger sign like Neuroshield, a giveaway like Lensify, and a stuffed boba plushie like Snugology.
